Dan Shore said he thinks he has the experience to help Salida.

“I’ve spent 30 years working with people in the finance field, and I think I can help the council find common ground,” Shore said.

His family bought a home in Salida nine years ago and moved here full time seven years ago.

“It was a big decision for us, but we have no regrets,” Shore said.

Working in business development for mutual funds, Shore has traveled all over and worked with lots of different types of people.

“I would try to draw on my business experience as much as I can,” Shore said. “I’ve worked at organizations with remarkable retention and others with revolving doors. I think the best managers are those that empower their people to go out and do their job. Making mistakes is part of the learning process. I’d like to work with the city staff to improve morale and improve turnover.”
